Advice for preparing a high quality application for an Endeavour Award

1. Allow sufficient time to prepare a high quality application. Develop a timetable for completing your application including reviewing the application prior to submitting. Do not leave your application until the last minute.
2. Think about what you are trying to achieve (personally, professionally and academically) through this program. Clearly outline your goals to give the Selection Committee an insight into your aspirations and demonstrate your commitment to your selected field.
3. Refer frequently to the Selection Criteria (on the Endeavour Awards website) to ensure that you address each criterion. The Selection Committee will assess your application against these selection criteria.
4. Advise your referees that you are applying for an Endeavour Award, their role and the timeline. You may consider inviting them to review your draft application and provide you with comments.
5. Outline clearly and concisely your reason for choosing your field of study e.g. the relationship to local and international issues (such as economic, government, social and political developments).
6. Explain the benefits of your proposed program to current issues and future developments in your host country, Australia and globally.
7. Provide concrete examples of your past achievements to support your study or research.
8. Outline, using concrete examples, the potential future benefits and linkages which will result from your proposed program at the individual, organisational and country level.
9. Review, edit and spell-check your application prior to submission.

Note: These tips are intended to help you in preparing your submission. You should also refer to the Applicant Guidelines available on the Endeavour Awards website at <https://aei.gov.au/Scholarships-and-Fellowships> for detailed information on completing all sections of the application.
